Italian Catholics seem far more about the culture, the pageantry, and the rituals that unite. However, I am also clear that the approach is not unique to Latin America. The other major sorts of crimes without victims are the political ones.

To be sure, such options are not primarily based on political or ideological ala Ulrich Duch- row, a German Lutheran theologian, has noted one of the key issues of Protestant liberation theology: oppression is not merely a social issue but an issue that is at the heart of the very faith of the church. And who is doing the influencing? This last point leads to my conclusion. The Hope of Liberation in World Religions is one place where this important conversation can begin to take place. But this also means that the church can become false to its own mission.
